Extended Study to Athens, Greece: Spring 2015

CLAS 251E: Individual Identity and the Material Culture of the Ancient Greek City

Director: Rebecca Miller Ammerman, Professor of the Classics

On-campus course: CLAS 251

Tentative travel dates: May 20-June 9, 2015

Course credit: one-half credit, linked with CLAS 251

Prerequisite: Greek 121 and 122 plus permission of Prof. R.M. Ammerman

Application deadline: Monday, October 27, 2014

Application form: www.colgate.edu/off-campus-study/extended-study

INFORMATION SESSION: MONDAY, OCTOBER 20, 4-5 PM, 112-114 LAWRENCE

OVERVIEW

Ancient Athens is the focus of the course that will trace the rise of the Greek citizen-state, or polis, with all of its political, economic, social and religious institutions. Students will stay in a small hotel in central Athens within walking distance of most archaeological excavations and museums.

The course will examine the different structures that defined the identity of an individual in ancient Greece in chronological sequence, from the earliest urban centers of the Bronze Age up to the conquest of the independent city-states by Philip of Macedon in 338 BCE. The identity of an individual, not only within a single polity but also within the broader Pan-Hellenic context, will be investigated. A major theme will be global interaction between the different populations and cultures of North Africa, the Near East, and the Greek world. The latter was comprised of numerous city-states, established from the shores of the Black Sea to the East all the way to France and Spain in the West, which gave shape to the development of Hellenic civilization. The course will focus on three moments when such interactions were most intense: the Bronze Age, the Persian Wars of the 5th century BCE, and the early Hellenistic Age.
The extended study introduces students at first hand to the physical settings where Greek urban life developed and made its fundamental contribution to western civilization. Most days will be devoted to visiting archaeological sites and museums throughout Athens and the surrounding area of Attica. A three-day field trip to the Pan-Hellenic sanctuaries at Olympia and Delphi is planned, as well as day trips to Mycenae, Epidauros, Marathon, Piraeus, and Eleusis.

Prerequisites are Greek 121 and 122 or a higher level Ancient Greek language course. In order to participate, the on-campus seminar CLAS 251 must be successfully completed for one credit in the spring semester immediately preceding the extended study program.