Native American Studies major Tess Christiansen '14 (left) and Hannah Fitton '14 presented their poster "The Brunk Site: The Public Outreach Efforts of an Oneida Archaeological Site in Central New York" on April 24, 2014 at the Annual Meeting of the Society for American Archaeology in Austin, Texas. The SAA is the largest organization of archaeologists in the world. The poster is based on archaeological fieldwork that they and other students completed at an Oneida Iroquois village site as part of the Native American Studies course Field Methods and Interpretation in Archaeology (ANTH 253).
